Futura Lithium Corp. Reveals IPO Plans

Wednesday, January 18, 2023 - Toronto, ON; The international lithium mining company Futura Lithium Corp. has revealed today their plans for a planned IPO. Company CEO Jonathan Harmon made an official statement while attending a regional mining conference in Buenos Aires, Argentina.

The confirmation that Futura Lithium will forward with a much anticipated IPO will see the company's shares traded publicly on one of the New York stock markets within 2023.

Jeremy Norwood, Futura Lithium's Chief Financial Officer had the following to say, " The choice to progress forward with an IPO reflects our complete confidence in the company's operational execution and exhibits that we have progressed to the point that Futura Lithium has entered into the playing field of competing with the biggest companies in the lithium industry."

When was asked when the Initial Public Offering would take place, Jonathan Harmon said, " We are aiming for the IPO to list by the 3rd quarter of 2023. I can confidently say to our private shareholders that the latest time would be the 4th quarter of this year."

Mr. Harmon added, "We are currently negotiating underwriting contracts for the IPO the largest global investment banks. Public announcements naming the institutions will be forthcoming in the near future."

In the coming months the company will allow their current private equity institutional investors to begin offering pre-IPO shares to retail and corporate investors at the evaluated and officially audited share price."
